

Notebook Objective and Setup

BGG08 contains the Collaborative Filtering model.

The CF is tested in both memory and model-based modes, on both the user's real ratings data and the synthesized data sets.

Using testing results, we select the most efficient recommendation system and make our business recommendations.

Business Objective

Build a content recommender for BoardGameGeek with a goal of addressing problems that are both common to recommenders in general, and specific to BGG:

- Cost of acquiring and maintaining data
- Cold Start problems where new users and items are not a part of the system
- Catalog coverage problems where popularity bias results in items of the catalog that are not in the recommendation system
- Sparse matrix issue where a combination of many items, many users, and few ratings results in low user/item crossover for identifying neighbors
- BGG specific problem where reimplementations/reskins of games result in separated user profiles when they should be similar
- Computational cost/time limitations when issuing recommendations

Visualizations

Create a visualization showing the number of users vs number of games rated, with a line at the median. We want to show the relatively few ratings and the long tail on the ratings distribution.

In [27]:

total users in system
len(real_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled)

Out[27]: 117263

In [28]:

```
num_ratings = {}

for user in real_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled:
    num_ratings[user] = len(real_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled[user])

num_ratings_df = pd.DataFrame(num_ratings.values(), index=num_ratings.keys()).reset_index()

x = num_ratings_df.loc[num_ratings_df[0]<500][0] med = num_ratings_df[0].median()

result = plt.hist(x, bins=50, edgecolor='k', alpha=0.65)
plt.axvline(med, color='k', linestyle='dashed', linewidth=1)

plt.title("Number of Users vs Number of Games Rated", fontsize=30)
plt.xlabel("Number of Games Rated", fontsize=20)
```

plt.ylabel("Number of Users", fontsize=20)

min_ylim, max_ylim = plt.ylim()
plt.text(med*1.1, max_ylim*0.9, 'Median: {:.2f}'.format(med), fontsize=20)

#plt.savefig('images/usersvsrated.png')
plt.show()

Out[28]:

In [29]:

```

how many users under the median?

num_under_43 = num_ratings_df.loc[num_ratings_df[0]<=43][0].count()
num_under_43_perc = round((num_under_43/num_ratings_df.shape[0]*100), 2)
print(str(num_under_43)+" users with 43 or fewer ratings (median), comprising "+str(num_

59189 users with 43 or fewer ratings (median), comprising 50.48% of users.

In [30]:

how many users under 20 ratings?

num_under_20 = num_ratings_df.loc[num_ratings_df[0]<=20][0].count()
num_under_20_perc = round(num_under_20/num_ratings_df.shape[0]*100, 2)
print(str(num_under_20)+" users with 20 or fewer ratings (median), comprising "+str(num_

34862 users with 20 or fewer ratings (median), comprising 29.73% of users.

In [31]:

make lists of users under and over the median from the dataframe users_under_median = list(num_ratings_df.loc[num_ratings_df[0]<=43]['index']) users_over_median = list(num_ratings_df.loc[num_ratings_df[0]>43]['index'])

now make a new list of validation users that are under and over the median val_under_median = [item for item in users_under_median if item in val_users] val_over_median = [item for item in users_over_median if item in val_users]

Memory Based

Use statistical techniques on the dataset to calculate the predictions.

In plain english, the memory model works by finding a subset of neighbors where we have v items in common. Then we calculate our cosine similarity with each member of the subset, using only our items in common. After picking the closest k neighbors, we make recommendations using items with at least n ratings within the subset.

We have several parameters to tune for the memory-based model for each of our data sets. They are:

- v : How many items do we need to have in common to be neighbors?
- k : How many closest neighbors do I want to consider for making new recommendations?
- n : How many of the k neighbors need to have rated an item in order for a rating to be produced for me?

Steps:

- For each user_a that we want to make recommendations for:
 - Find users_b who have rated v items in common
 - for each user_b:
 - Calculate intersection of ratings for user_a and user_b with v minimum items
 - calculate cosine similarity between user_a and user_b
 - Determine k closest neighbors_k based on cosine similarity
 - for each item_i in the games dictionary,
 - if neighbor_k rated item_i, get their rating (weighted by their similarity)
 - predicted rating for item_i is average of all neighbor's ratings
 - get accuracy metrics for user_a based on predictions vs actual for user_a rated items
 - sort predicted rating items and show x top recommendations

How do I evaluate my recommender? What we really want is a high RECALL in addition to a "reasonable" error. With that in mind it's more important to make sure that a user's actual items are correctly categorized as "recommended", defined as being over the user's mean. We're also interested in a good amount of catalog coverage, and still a reasonable error. To that end, our evaluation metric is a custom metric based on weighted scores of error, recall, and coverage.

Finding Optimal v , k and n

This section involves iterative grid searching on the previously mentioned parameters v , k and n . The search is performed on a smaller subset of 100 users. Not all searches are present in the cell below; search scores are tracked and saved to file and then reset in the same cell.

Model Based

Next we will build a recommender using modeling with the Surprise package.

Steps:

- Build trainset with all
- Fit to train set
- build trainset with VALIDATION group only
- Build anti-trainset with VALIDATION group only
- Predict on VALIDATION trainset for metrics
- Predict on VALIDATION anti-trainset for new
- Get accuracy metrics for actually rated
- Filter out actually rated and report on recommendations

Test Different Algorithms

We're testing the following models on the data set:

- SVD: The accepted standard for recommender systems is Singular Value Decomposition, which is creating two long and wide vectors that best match the data
- Normal Predictor: predicts a random rating based on the distribution of the training set. Is expected to perform poorly.
- Baseline Only: Uses alternating least squares to estimate biases for the data set. Is expected to perform just ok.

In [47]:

```

benchmark = []

algorithms = [SVD(), NormalPredictor(),
              BaselineOnly(),
              ]

Iterate over all algorithms
for algorithm in algorithms:

    print("New Algorithm "+str(algorithm))

    # Perform cross validation
    results = cross_validate(algorithm, data, measures=['RMSE'], cv=3, verbose=True)

    # Get results & append algorithm name
    results_df = pd.DataFrame.from_dict(results).mean(axis=0) results_df = results_df.append(pd.Series([str(algorithm)].split(' ')[0].split('.')[0]).append(results_df))

pd.DataFrame(benchmark).set_index('Algorithm').sort_values('test_rmse')

Baseline only is NEARLY as good as an untuned SVD with only a fraction of the computational time.
Since computational time is a serious concern on data of our size, we move forward using BaselineOnly.

Fit and Predict

In [59]:

```
build a full trainset
trainset = data.build_full_trainset()

build_testset() makes a test set out of the same trainset data (it is NOT an anti-testset)

While recall and coverage are ok, our user error is MUCH worse with the model. The model also has a much higher computational cost, and requires a user have been present at training to include. These factors lead us to favor the Memory-based approach.

Tests with Synthetic Data

We now run the exact same series of Memory-based and Model-based tests, only with our Synthetic data set.

In [31]:

```

Opening JSON file
with open('synthetic_ratings/synth_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled_100.json') as json_file synth_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled100 = json.load(json_file)

Memory Based

Visualizations

Create a visualization showing the number of users vs number of games rated, with a line at the median. We can see how our median has changed now that we have synthetic data.

In [186...]

```
num_ratings = {}

for user in synth_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled100:
    num_ratings[user] = len(synth_user_ratings_dictionary_scaled100[user])

num_ratings_df = pd.DataFrame(num_ratings.values(), index=(num_ratings.keys())).reset_index()

fix, ax = plt.subplots(figsize=(20,10))

x = num_ratings_df.loc[num_ratings_df[0]<500][0]
med = num_ratings_df[0].median()

result = plt.hist(x, bins=50, edgecolor='k', alpha=0.65)
plt.axvline(med, color='k', linestyle='dashed', linewidth=1)

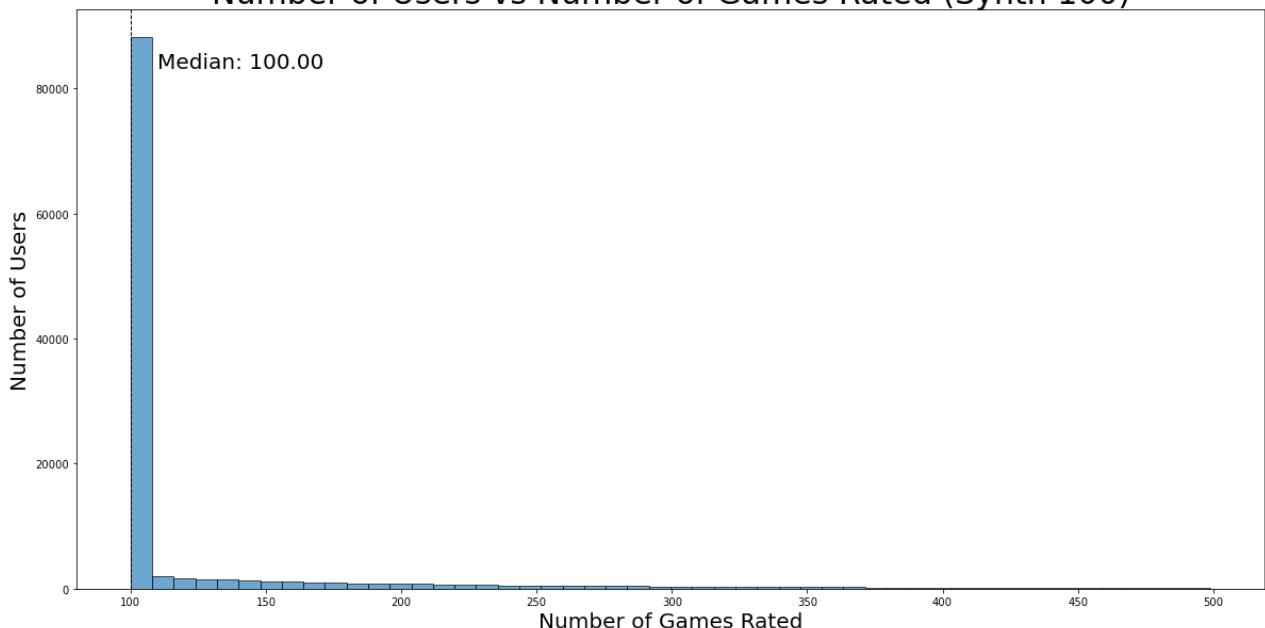

plt.title("Number of Users vs Number of Games Rated (Synth 100)", fontsize=30)
plt.xlabel("Number of Games Rated", fontsize=20)
plt.ylabel("Number of Users", fontsize=20)

min_ylim, max_ylim = plt.ylim()
plt.text(med*1.1, max_ylim*0.9, 'Median: {:.2f}'.format(med), fontsize=20)

#plt.savefig('images/synth_usersvsrated.png')
plt.show()

num_under_100_perc = round(num_under_100/num_ratings_df.shape[0]*100, 2)
print(str(num_under_100)+" users with 100 or fewer ratings (median), comprising "+str(n))

86239 users with 100 or fewer ratings (median), comprising 73.54% of users.

Get Validation Scores

In final round testing, I'm observing if our synthetic data additions have improved the group I was most interested in improving to begin with - the users below the median. We run our optimal v/k/n with the validation set of each of these groups to determine if we continue with this synthetic data set.

Model Based

- real_user_ratings_dictionary: dictionary of user's real ratings for games
 - format is {user: {str(item): rating}}
- game_id_lookup: dictionary of game names for game ids
 - format is {id: rating}
- user_mean_lookup: dictionary of user's mean rating
 - format is {user: {'user mean':mean}}
- real_user_ratings_long: dataframe of melted user's real ratings for games MINUS means
 - format is Index : UserID : BGId : Rating
- train_users, val_users, test_users
 - lists of users in train/val/test

Steps:

- Build trainset with all
- Fit to train set
- build trainset with VALIDATION group only
- Build anti-trainset with VALIDATION group only
- Predict on VALIDATION trainset for metrics

- Predict on VALIDATION anti-trainset for new
- Get accuracy metrics for actually rated
- Filter out actually rated and report on recommendations
- Hit Precision@k and recall@k ?

The Model method, which achieving full catalog coverage, tanks on Recall and has very poor error. We continue to favor the memory-based model.

Get Test Set Scores - Synth Data

In final round testing, I'm observing if our synthetic data additions have improved the group I was most interested in improving to begin with - the users below the median. We run our optimal v/k/n with the validation set of each of these groups to determine if we continue with this synthetic data set.

Evaluation

In the end, the Memory Based approach provided far superior scores to the Model Based approach for both Real and Synthetic data. The overall scores for Memory-Based were .53/.57 MAE, 58%/62% Recall, and 83%/92.5% Coverage, in contrast to the Model-Based approach with scores of .92/.94 MAE, 63%/34% Recall, and 87%/100% Coverage. Although the Model-based approach reached 100% coverage on the synthetic data, the other error scores were unacceptably low. Based on these evaluations, we opt to use the Memory-based statistical method for all further recommendations.

Although the Model-based approach reached 100% coverage on the synthetic data, the other error scores were unacceptably low. Based on these evaluations, we opt to use the Memory-based statistical method for all further recommendations.

How do we evaluate the quality of the recommender?

Now we have a method and have overcome some of our problems - how do we evaluate our recommender?

First we must define what it means to have a recommendation. A RECOMMENDED item is a game that the user will like more than their average. A user's average is relevant only to themselves. If John is a tough rater and his average is a 6, and Mike is a generous rater and his average is an 8, the numbers don't really matter. What we want to see is games that the user will like more than their personal average. Each user's overall rating bias is mathematically removed from the system, leaving only their differential for a given item above or below their average.

A RELEVANT item is any game that the user actually rates more than their average.

Part of a recommender's success is if it correctly identifies the user's relevant items as recommended items. We want all of the items that the user actually likes more than their average, to be predicted by the recommender as being more than their average. This is called RECALL. A recall of 100% is preferable, meaning the system successfully predicted all of the user's relevant games as recommended. However we also want a reasonable raw prediction error while we do this.

Defining "reasonable" here is a little hazy because there becomes a point where a ratings error difference is minutiae. There's a large difference between a 6 and an 8 rating, but not a large difference between a 7 and a 7.1. Once we have an acceptable error, we are interested in whether or not the system can correctly identify the user's relevant items.

We're also interested in improving our catalog's coverage, and increasing the total number of recommended items in the system to include less popular items. This eliminates the popularity bias common to collaborative filters, by offering less popular titles to users that they may not have otherwise considered.

Model Results

How does synthetic data improve our recommender? We tried the recommender with real data, and boosting to 100 ratings, and had some interesting results.

Using our synthetic data, we had an overall reduction to our user error - MAE and RMSE went down. However MAE/RMSE went down only for users under the median, which I would argue are the users that we most want to improve recommendations for. For these users, the reduction in user error was significant. Our users over the median saw an increase in error.

MAE

- ALL Users ▼ 7.66% MAE improvement from .571 to .527
- Users UNDER median ▼ 18.39% MAE improvement from .608 to .497
- Users OVER median ▲ 4.86% MAE deterioration from .533 to .559

RMSE

- ALL Users ▼ 3.79% Users RMSE improvement from .730 to .703
- UNDER median ▼ 13.98% RMSE improvement from .769 to .661
- Users OVER median ▲ 7.82% RMSE deterioration from .691 to .745

The synthetic data resulted in a slight reduction to our recall, meaning the system's ability to accurately classify a user's relevant items at recommended. This was true for all user groups. This is undesirable, and if we cannot resolve it with further content tuning, it should be considered if the synthetic system is a true improvement.

Recall

- ALL Users ▼ 5.82% Recall deterioration from 61.75% to 58.15%
- Users UNDER median ▼ 5.6% Recall deterioration from 59.3% to 56%
- Users OVER median ▼ 5.96% Recall deterioration from 64.3% to 60.4%

Finally, the system had a large increase in catalog coverage, especially for those users over the median. We achieved a far higher level of recommendation diversity when using the synthetic data, because the content-based recommender doesn't know how popular an item is, and populates the synthetic ratings with more diverse recommendations. This overcomes a large challenge to recommender systems, and is a desirable result.

Catalog Coverage

- ALL Users ▲ 9.69% Coverage Improvement from 83.93% to 92.06%
- Users UNDER median ▲ 9.59% Coverage Improvement from 83.64% to 91.66%
- Users OVER median ▲ 49.17% Coverage Improvement from 54.89% to 81.88%

The Recommender Model

Our final model uses accepted memory-based statistical methods to evaluate a user's local neighborhood and provide recommendations. Memory-based methods were far superior to Model-based methods in testing and evaluation, and have the added advantage of improved speed and lower computational cost. A model-based recommender built in the Surprise package requires that a user be part of the model training, making it incompatible for a new user to the system. Statistical based methods incorporate new users immediately.

Our method takes the following steps to produce recommendations:

- User averages are removed from the user's ratings to remove their personal bias and center all ratings around 0
- If the user has fewer than 5 ratings, will implement a Cold Start protocol to obtain baseline information
- If the user has fewer than 100 ratings, synthesizes ratings to 100 using the content-based similarity filter and the user's existing ratings
- Defines potential neighbors as other users with at least 5 items in common.
- Evaluates user's cosine similarity to each potential neighbor. Similarity is calculated on all items rated in common, with the minimum of 5
- System defines neighbors over .8 similarity as part of neighborhood (entire potential neighborhood would be valid, but we provide cutoff for computational cost reasons)
- Any item rated by at least 5 neighbors produces an item rating for the user, which is weighted by each contributing neighbor's similarity
- Items rated above 0 are served as recommendations (user's mean is added back for presentation)

Meeting our Objectives

Plan for fast data acquisition and cleaning to allowing frequent system updates

The basic data update can be done in as little as 30 minutes a day via API and can be entirely automated through the acquisition and cleaning steps.

Deal with computational cost of recommendation system

Our end model is purely mathematical and requires no ongoing maintenance or model deployment. It does not use machine learning and instead uses statistical methods, allowing a user to receive a recommendation within seconds.

Address Cold Start problem with a specific new user plan

Address in common fashion with user questionnaire:

- Ask category questions for "What kind of board games do you like to play?", allow multiple category selections
- Select favorite mechanics, allow multiple selections
- Show a set of games in those categories and ask them to rate at least 5
- Generate synthetic ratings
- Generate recommendations

There was insufficient time to implement the cold start in this project, and it has become part of Future Work

Overcome catalog coverage challenge using synthetic content-based data

Since synthetic ratings are produced from the content-based filter which does not care about game popularity, we bring additional catalog titles into our system, which are then passed to other users.

Overcome the sparse matrix challenge using synthetic content-based data

In a synthetic system, all users have a minimum n ratings with which to locate neighbors. More matches are made and quality neighbors located.

Overcome the BGG-specific challenge using synthetic content-based data

Synthetic data accounts for and bridges the gaps of similar-but-different content by adding ratings for these items to a user's profile.

Future Work

- The quality of the synthetic collaborative system is entirely dependent on the hand-tuned quality of the content-based system. Based on the preliminary improvements with the synthetic data, I am confident that with more tuning work on the content-based system I can further improve the quality to where Recall is also improved.
- We need to find our sweet spot of synthetic ratings to recommendation time. Users want results fast, so we need to give those results while also having a quality system. In my example I synthesized data to 100 ratings, but we should check timing with 50, 75, etc. Again, this was simply a time issue where I ran out of time for further testing.
- Our next task is to implement the cold start plan to integrate our new users.
- Finally, we will deploy our user GUI and the system will be usable.
